FORTY NINER OWNERS

ANTHONY J. (TONY) MORABITO
Co-Owner

VICTOR P. (VIC) MORABITO
Co-Owner

A football dynasty founded only five years ago has mushroomed into one of the most promising and spectacular ventures in professional sport.

From a humble, precarious beginning, the San Francisco 49ers have developed into a powerful major league franchise. This growth has been attained through the undivided support and cooperation of the sports writers, radio men and general public in the San Francisco area.

Anthony J. (Tony) Morabito has been the key man in the rise of the 49ers. He dreamed of owning his own professional club as long ago as the late 1920's when he played halfback for St. Ignatius High in San Francisco. A shoulder injury ended his gridiron career at the University of Santa Clara.

But it was at Santa Clara that Tony met Lawrence T. (Buck) Shaw, then assistant coach at the Mission School, and an important friendship was formed. While conducting an extensive lumber carrier business before World War II, Tony started the groundwork for professional football in San Francisco. He met disappointments and rebuffs at every turn until the All-America Conference began operations in 1946.

In four years of AAC campaigning, the 49ers saw their average game attendance grow from an average of less than 30,000 to more than 40,000. This gradual increase has been Tony Morabito's biggest satisfaction. The San Francisco metropolitan area, containing more than 2,000,000 residents, has been "sold" on professional football.

The merger of the AAC and the National Football League has led to even greater interest in the fortunes of the 49ers, a fact confirmed by the largest season ticket sale in the club's history.

Tony and Mrs. Morabito reside in San Mateo, a close-by suburb of San Francisco, with their daughters, Grace and "Midge."

Victor P. (Vic) Morabito, younger brother of Tony, also played football for St. Ignatius. After a year at Santa Clara, Vic transferred to the University of California where he was a halfback on the reserve or "Rambler" squad. He graduated from the Berkeley institution in 1941.

Until early this year Vic's principal duties were with his ships' outfitting service on the San Francisco waterfront. Having sold that business, he is now taking an active part in the management of the 49ers. He resides in San Francisco with his wife and young son, "Rickey."

FORTY NINER COACHES

Lawrence T. "Buck" Shaw

HEAD COACH

Wherever the game of football is played or discussed, the name of Lawrence Timothy "Buck" Shaw evokes admiration and respect. His players know him best for soft-spoken directions and commands that seem to tap hidden reservoirs of gridiron talent; fans in the San Francisco area and throughout the nation delight in watching his fast, colorful teams that are always coming up with the unexpected in offensive maneuvers; fellow coaches pay him tribute as one of the master strategists of the game.

"Buck" learned his basic lessons from the great Knute Rockne, playing tackle on the Fighting Irish varsities of 1919-20-21. After holding coaching positions at North Carolina State and the University of Nevada, his rise to fame began in earnest when he joined Maurice "Clipper" Smith's staff at Santa Clara in 1929.

When Smith transferred to Villanova after the 1934 season, "Buck" stepped into the top spot and compiled a six-season record that is one of the best in West Coast collegiate annals. His Bronco squads rang up 47 victories against only 10 losses and four ties. The 1936-37 Santa Clara teams defeated Louisiana State in the New Orleans Sugar Bowl classic.

During World War II Santa Clara abandoned football but "Buck" stayed on to assist in the physical training program for military students. Preliminary plans for starting a second major professional football league at war's end were underway and Shaw agreed to take over as head man of the San Francisco 49ers.

During the four years they were in the now defunct All-America Conference, Shaw's teams won 38 games, lost 14 and tied 2. But even this brilliant record was good enough only for a perennial "bridesmaid" role to the powerful Cleveland Browns, the four-time champions.

But "Buck" and his men garnered a goodly share of the glory by dominating AAC team total offense and scoring in 1948-49 and team scoring in 1948-49.

"Buck" is looking forward to the Sunday afternoons when his 49ers will match power, speed and strategy with the teams in the merged National Football League.

"This should be pro football's greatest season," he says. "Right now it is foolish to try and pick the best clubs. All thirteen teams have been strengthened by the merger and an outstanding crop of new rookies."

"Buck" and his No. 1 rooter, Mrs. Marge Shaw, make their home in Atherton, California, 30 miles south of San Francisco. They have two married daughters.

James Wilmer "Jim" Lawson

ASSISTANT COACH

Jim Lawson first won football fame as an All-American end at Stanford University. Jim climaxed his collegiate career with a slashing performance in the 1925 Rose Bowl game with Notre Dame and the "Four Horsemen." After getting his diploma, Jim played for the Jacksonville, Florida, team in the old American Football League and later for the New York Yankees.

In 1932 Jim was named assistant coach at his alma mater. He served under Claude "Tiny" Thornhill and Clark Shaughnessy and was appointed head coach when Shaughnessy left after the 1941 season. But Jim went into the Navy as a lieutenant the following summer. He was stationed at St. Mary's Pre-Flight and then saw action in the western Pacific aboard the USS West Virginia.

Jim joined the 49ers in 1946 and since then has collaborated with his old friend, "Buck" Shaw, in four winning campaigns.

Jim and Mrs. Lawson reside in Palo Alto, California, where he operates a cleaning plant in the off-season. The Lawsons have two grown sons.

Charles "Chuck" Taylor

ASSISTANT COACH

When the 49ers signed "Chuck" Taylor last January as a replacement for Eddie Erdelatz, who had been named head coach at the U.S. Naval Academy, "Buck" Shaw laughingly said: "Chuck, we should make you a player-coach."

There was more truth than poetry in Shaw's statement. Taylor was a Stanford contemporary of Frankie Albert and Norm Standlee, two of the most important cogs in the 49er grid machine. And Shaw's new assistant is hale and hearty enough to don moleskins and show his line charges how it's done.

"Chuck" was an All-Coast sophomore guard in 1940 when Stanford's "Cinderella" team went through undefeated and into the Rose Bowl. He continued his outstanding play in 1941-42 and joined the Navy after graduating in the spring of 1943. "Chuck" commanded an LCT in European action.

He performed for the Miami Seahawks in 1946, then returned to Stanford as freshman coach. In three seasons his yearlings compiled an amazing record of 17 victories, one tie and no defeats.

"Chuck" and his wife, Margaret, live in Menlo Park, California, with their two small children, Susan and Douglas.

1950

Held January 21-22, 1950

When the NFL and the AAFC merged on December 9, 1949, the NFL draft, like the league, increased by three teams—the Baltimore Colts, the Cleveland Browns, and the San Francisco 49ers. At the draft, members of the 1949 New York Bulldogs' active roster and reserve list were eligible to be selected along with the college seniors. Such players have NY Bulldogs in parentheses after their school.

Shortly after the draft, the New York Yankees of the AAFC were divided between the New York Giants and the Bulldogs. The rest of the AAFC players went into a special allocation pool from which they were selected by the NFL teams. Each team received 10 choices in the allocation draft, except for Baltimore, which received 15. Before the start of the 1950 season, the Bulldogs-Yankees team was renamed the New York Yanks.
